Letter to My Daughter Jamie on the Fifth Anniversary of Her Death

Jamie, I can't believe it is five years without you here on earth. You are always in my thoughts each and every day. I pray for you and your kids constantly. I still have my times when I just completely break down and lose it and just don't know what to do. I cry so hard that I can't breath and on those days I am just in a fog. My heart aches and I feel so lonely without you.

Chloe and Cody are doing well. They are both so beautiful! Both of them ask questions about you and are trying to figure out why their Mom is in Heaven. A couple of weeks ago when I got Chloe off of the bus she came into the house and was very proud to show me a story that she wrote about you on the bus. Sadly it was her remembering the day that you left us. She was only 3 ½ and her memory of that traumatic day was very tough to listen to. We both cried and talked about you. Chloe made her first communion and she looked so beautiful and just like you. These milestones with both kids just rip new holes in my heart all of the time. I was so proud of her yet my heart was crying out so bad that you weren't here to be with her on her special day.

You are continuing to do great work here on earth through your Foundation and helping so many kids! We are all working hard in your name and I tell everyone that you are the super star, we are just your hands here on earth doing your work of helping others and spreading your kindness to all in need.

Our mission to be more like you and to have others be more like you is so important as we believe that spreading random acts of kindness like you did can change the world. I am often asked what was Jamie like or what does it mean to "be more like Jamie?" So, at your last fundraiser, I gave it a shot to describe you:

Jamie loved her kids and wanted more than anything to be a Mom.

Jamie loved spending time with her family.

Jamie loved the beach and her dog Louie.

Jamie loved interacting with people.

Jamie was kind, generous, loving, compassionate and empathetic.

Jamie was a true friend to all and would help anyone in need.

Jamie believed in God, miracles, loved her faith in the Blessed Mother.

This is my little girl that was taken from this world much too soon. We lost a tremendous force for good but we will continue to work hard in her name to help change the world one child at a time. So, when you think of Jamie, give a hug, spread some laughter, help someone in need, and say a little prayer that she is looking down on all of us from Heaven above. Rest in peace my sweet angel until we meet again.

XOXO

Jamie's Dad
